Scope and Content:

Black and white photograph showing the London and Port Stanley Railway, Kettle Creek Bridge north of St. Thomas, with the South Pond Mills Bridge visible in the background. Published in the St. Thomas Times-Journal, April 6, 1967, with caption: "Reinforce Centre Section - Canadian National Railways workmen prepare the centre section of the CNR-L&PS viaduct in the north portion of St. Thomas for this weekend's installment of two new 'legs' which support the bridge over Kettle Creek. The legs, weighing an estimated 10 tons each, will be lowered into position by two giant cranes, one on each side of the centre span. 'Helping' the workmen on their lofty 100-foot-plus perch is a wild raccoon which was determined to remain underfoot."
